

Broadcast rules that are in place protect the public interest and should be held in tact, not changed. Our government is built on the premise that concentration of power is dangerous to the people. This is true in every aspect of its design in the Constitution. The same holds true today. No matter what the organization's political stance, it a threat to the free distrubution of information to allow media consolidation. Keeep the rules as they are. Keep our democratic tradition and rights.
